Cancer Support at Piedmont Athens Regional

At Piedmont Athens Regional, we treat the patient – not just the disease. Because cancer treatment involves more than medical care, free programs such as yoga, cooking demos, expressive art class, and counseling are available to anyone affected by cancer at any phase in his or her journey. The Loran Smith Center for Cancer Support at Piedmont Athens Regional serves anyone regardless of where they received treatment.

Joel’s Journal:
Someone to Lean on

Joel Siebentritt, Manager, Cancer Support Services

Bill Withers’ 1972 hit, “Lean on Me” holds an especially powerful message and poignant truth for the world today. I hope you will take a moment to listen to it again and hear its simple wisdom in the context of our global pandemic. We are now almost six months into social distancing, mask-wearing and sheltering at home. Honestly, the isolation and slowing down was initially a welcome change of pace for me; I’ve been able to slow down in a way that was not previously possible and experience welcome reconnection with my wife and sons. On the other hand, I really miss hugs! I miss being physically close to friends and seeing loved ones in all three dimensions not just on a computer screen. This level of isolation hurts.

There are so many people in our community that don’t live with anyone and for whom the aloneness can easily lead to despair. The truth is, especially when we cannot be together we all need somebody to lean on. But how can we lean on each other when we can’t be together? That is the big question we’ve been asking ourselves at the Loran Smith Center. Today, the “love and laughter” that once blessed our space is only found over the phone and on the computer. But hold the phone...its working! We are calling our patients and our patients are calling us. Participants in our virtual support groups are meeting new people, learning new things and finding a way forward despite the limitations wrought by COVID. Yoga and Tai Chi exercise classes continue to be a source of relaxation and awareness and its all just a few mouse-clicks away.

Our goal now is to broaden the types of support available to you in two ways 1) more program options and 2) peer support. First, we invite you to register for a wide range of cancer support programs from across the Piedmont system. Visit piedmont.org/cancerwellness to learn about all the programs offered by Piedmont Cancer Wellness. Registration just takes a phone call. Second, would you like to receive a call from another cancer survivor or caregiver in our cancer support community? Or would you be willing to serve as a peer support to a newly diagnosed cancer patient? If so, please let us know and we will work to create peer matches for phone and email support that can ease the stress of cancer treatment and alleviate social isolation due to the pandemic. We look forward to hearing from you!

Please read on to help us welcome social work interns, Jesse and Deb to the team. And, take a minute to learn something new about your health from the Loran Smith Center team. Finally, make a commitment to finding something or someone to lean on in the days ahead and be open to carrying someone else’s load for a while too.

Through it all, be well. Joel

My Dad Does Kegels

Lauren Liverman, LCSW, Oncology Social Worker

I’ll bet that got your attention! Well, let me explain. My dad was recently diagnosed with prostate cancer. He’s 75, yet with the biological profile of a man in his 50s (no comorbidities, no medications, out hustles me on the daily...). As he was preparing to discuss treatment options with his urologist, he told me that his biggest concern was his quality of life. He decided that laparoscopic, robotic prostatectomy would be his treatment, even though incontinence is a possible side effect. Undeterred, and blessed with not one but TWO daughters in the medical field, he consulted with his girls on how to maximize his quality of life post-prostatectomy. That’s when the discussion of pelvic floor exercises came up. A lot of people have heard of Kegels, yet most think that they are only for women, and have more to do with sexual function/satisfaction. But did you know that you fellas can benefit from connecting with your pelvic floor as well? I consulted Lone Howell, a Piedmont Oconee Health Campus based physical therapist who provides pelvic floor therapy on the subject. She informed me that pelvic floor rehabilitation consists of “specific pelvic floor exercises, biofeedback, and electrical stimulation to aid in recruiting the muscles to help control urine flow”, and encouraged any patient concerned with continence related issues to request PT consultation. A quick search lead me to several research articles that indicate significant benefits to men who perform Kegel-style exercises in the post-op setting.

My dad is several days post-op and is doing well. He said he’s thankful to have learned about pelvic floor exercises prior to his surgery so he could begin developing the important mind-body connection, making the transition to exercises even smoother after prostate removal. Wherever you are in your treatment / recovery, if you are struggling with continence issues, please speak with your doctor! There is good chance that you too can benefit from these exercises and experience an improved quality of life, and we have terrific practitioners like Lone that are ready to help.

Wishing you wellness in mind, body, and spirit,
Lauren

With September marking Ovarian Cancer Awareness month and October Breast Cancer Awareness month, let’s look at some facts regarding these cancers.

Ovarian Cancer
Ovarian cancer is very rare (22,440 cases diagnosed in the U.S. in 2017 with 14,080 deaths), can be symptomless and is often diagnosed late. Many of the symptoms can easily be ignored: abdominal bloating, feeling full after eating very little, changes in bowel or bladder habits, abnormal vaginal bleeding, unintentional weight loss or gain, unexplained back pain.

Treatment: ovarian cancer typically includes surgery followed by chemotherapy.

Risks: Family History, Genetic mutation, age, early menarche (start of periods), delayed menopause, never getting pregnant, receiving fertility treatments, smoking, PCOS – polycystic ovarian syndrome, ethnicity (Caucasian women are more likely to get ovarian cancer).

Breast Cancer
Breast Cancer is the second most common cancer in women (second only to lung cancer) with more than 255,000 cases predicted in 2019. Often there are no symptoms, but changes in the breast – size, shape, lump or mass, skin changes, rash, dimpling of the skin, nipple discharge, scaling, flaking or redness of the skin, pain in the breast can all be signs of breast cancer.

Treatment: breast cancer varies based on the type of breast cancer, but involves surgery, radiation therapy, chemotherapy, hormone blocking therapy and immunotherapy.

Risks: Family history, early menarche, late menopause, never getting pregnant, age, hormone use, obesity.

Two major distinctions in ovarian and breast cancer, there are no screening tests for ovarian cancer, unlike breast cancer where self-exams and mammograms can lead to early detection.

63% of women with ovarian cancer will die from the disease whereas that statistic drops to 16% for women with breast cancer. Ovarian cancer strikes more caucasian women. Both black and caucasian women get breast cancer at similar rates, but more black women will die from the disease (typically due to a more aggressive form of breast cancer).

With any cancer, we can reduce the risk through habits that we can control: Maintain a healthy weight, aim for 150 minutes of exercise a week, avoid tobacco, limit alcohol (no more than 1 drink per day for women, 2 for men), avoid processed foods, limit red and processed meats, increase consumption of fruits and vegetables, wear sunscreen.

While many are concerned about going to healthcare facilities during the pandemic, I know here at Piedmont we are doing everything possible to maintain a safe environment for both patients and staff. Don’t be afraid to schedule your screenings, wear your mask, maintain distance and wash your hands.

Welcome Deb!

Deborah (Deb) Kim is a second-year Master of Social Work student who went back to school after working for over 20 years in corporate America and earning an MBA. (She took the scenic route to get to social work. It’s a long story.) She is very excited to join the team at LSCCS and help clients as much as she can. Deb wants to be a medical social worker when she’s finished with school (hopefully for good this time!) and is looking forward to the end of summer and the start of her internship.

Deb is usually full of caffeine energy and should be easy to spot; just look for the 5’ tall blur with a smile on her face and coke-bottle glasses perched on her nose. She lives in Athens during the week and goes home to Forsyth County on weekends to be with her husband, three fur babies (cats), and mother-in-law, who lives with them (another long story). She’s looking forward to meeting you all soon!

Welcome Jesse!

Jesse Cooper is a second year MSW student that has returned to receive his masters after 12 years in the mental health field. In 2017 he became a Certified Alcohol and Drug Counselor II, and is a Medication Assisted Therapy Specialist. For the past four years he has been working with persons with addiction and participants of Newton County Mental Health Court through his employment at Southeastern Psychological Associates. Prior to this Jesse worked with children and families with open cases with the Department of Family and Children’s services. Jesse has a very eclectic background as he has worked as a veterinary surgical technician, horse trainer, and holds a bachelors degree in drama, and did in fact run away with the circus for three years to perform through out Europe.

Jesse currently lives in Dacula, Georgia with his fur child, ten year old whippet, Sofia and two horses. In his very little free time Jesse tends to be outdoors, working with his horses, hiking, camping and anything that reconnects and grounds him. Jesse also coaches a youth equestrian vaulting team in Covington Georgia.
